After a click on the panel it shows a new JFrame which has it's content displayed. Now, since there can be multiple JFrames open at the same time I add a separate panel to the first one that, when clicked, should show the second window. The problem is that when a JFrame is closed it should close all it's windows (obviously) and since each window has it's own EventHandler for the panelclick, they aren't all being removed when the JFrame closes. How can I solve this? A: Since I'm not super sure what you are trying to accomplish I won't be explaining the solution in detail (I am guessing you want to fire a method that will display a new JFrame), but I will answer your question as to why you didn't get into the problem you are talking about (when a JFrame is closed it should close all it's windows). When you create a JFrame, you are creating a Window and a content container, and also
