Q: Applying a non linear transformation to a solution of a linear PDE is it OK to apply a non linear transformation to a solution of a linear PDE; I have a first order linear partial differential equation. Now I am thinking of doing a change of variables, which is a non linear transformation, to transform the variables. This way I change the PDE to a linear PDE, which I can solve easily. Am I over complicating things? A: You can do it with constant coefficients if you're only changing the independent variable, but it's trickier otherwise. You should be careful with non-linear changes of variables, because they change the nature of the solutions in such a way that the boundary and initial conditions become difficult to solve for. As expected, I have been successfully returning a "paid" transaction. However, when I send a pre-auth payment, I get the following error: [PayPal\Common\Exceptions\PayPalConnectionExceptions\PayPalConnectionException] The provided API credentials are invalid. In the documentation I found this note: Pre-auth payments are typically used for transactions which require only a small amount of money, but have a large amount of value associated with them, such as payments on ecommerce sites, or registrations to ecommerce sites. This method of payment will not allow the amount of the transaction to be changed after the payment has been initiated. I believe my issue is a large amount of value associated with the transaction to be changed after the payment has been initiated. I tried the API with a pre-auth and it works. This funding opportunity will award up to $4 million in non-defense industrial research and development (R&D) or Engineering Development programs (ED) to small businesses with up to $50 million in revenues.
