Turns out, the Hint Button does a really great job on a certain game, but not on others... so it's your duty to figure out just the right buttons to press so that your character explains stuff to that annoying NPC! (Did you hear that Hint Button? YOU... ARE... SO... AWESOME!) The Hint Button Helper utility allows you to configure a number of settings for use with the Hint Button service. See it in action, in the video above! The Legend of Rainbow Hollow is now available on the App Store. Available as paid and free versions. Support If you'd like to request help, please use the support forum. Here you will receive support from GameFaqs staff and members! Do you not want to help your customer at all? I know that at its core this is just a simple clone of Star Wars: Luminous Arc for the Arcades and maybe I underestimated you guys, but I really want the interface as it was in the arcade game. I've been meaning to make a play though just to try it out, but I have a dead 360 because I legit just bought it off of craigslist to rip my old games to it! So unfortunately I can't but that would be fun. How do I do it? This is pretty cool but I wish there was the option to use it to actually teach English for once. I mean, this is the kind of thing we all wish you would add, but we don't really know until it's in there. For a year now I've been using this to alleviate the frustration I have with teaching students to play specific games with the particularly dreaded and frustrating Hint-button. Since I've released it publicly I've been getting a lot of people asking if there are settings to access the Hint-button for games that aren't supported by the control scheme. Much as I love you guys I can't condone using it to teach-learn English, but thanks for allowing me to try it for this before I'm torpedoed from the official forums. Oh man, this is EXACTLY what you need right now bro! I mean, I would also love to see the option to actually use the Hint-button to teach something cool (not boring and generic like the classics like Pokemon). I think it would really help people's achievements if you unlocked this option, I'm sure there's a high demand

Desk Job has no real plot. It's not a narrative game, it's an arcade-style simulation, a dream of your future life, and, just maybe, an opportunity to redefine the genre as we know it. Description: The world is full of good people doing important things, and you're one of them. You wake up on the sidewalk, blood on your shoulder and a couple of D-Bags in your head. Gotta figure out how to be more like them. So you head over to a nearby coffee shop, where the manager invites you to fill out a survey, and offers to host your in-company interview. You ask for a steaming hot cup of joe to fill you up, and your desk job as a receptionist begins. It's a comforting daydream, a chance to grow up and prove to yourself that you can break free from your mark on the ground. But maybe the dream is only wishful thinking? There are some things you know from deep, abiding down. Like chairs. Desk Job is the de facto successor to the Portal series. Like Portal, it is an experiment with minimalist gameplay and game design. Again, there is no plot. Just an archway to a colorful and whimsical future, brightened by the twinkling lights of your desk job and the primordial fuels of your heart. All of this should take you less than 30 minutes. Features: – Arcade-style, arcade-like, arcade-y sim experience where the game resets itself every 30 seconds to encourage players to learn the controls. – Learn about the ins-and-outs of the desk's portability using the controller's on-screen buttons. – Block out the outside world using the desk's "Blackout mode". – No plot. Just an archway to a colorful, bright, office-horror-future. "Free" is the operative word here. The game is free to play and download. To find a place to play, you can: – Create a free account on the Steam website, the app's main website, – Add to your Steam wishlist. – Keep it in the Steam folder on your desktop to pick up at a moment's notice, and play it when no one's looking
