Facebook is rapidly falling into the clutches of the law — and regulators are ready to settle the issue. The social network is being drawn into a broader discussion of how old and new media works, and regulators are determined to use the case against it as a pivotal point of decision. When Facebook faced up to the investigation of $1 billion for recording the personal data of 87 million people, the Internet giant ramped up its legal firepower. It hired the best US defense lawyers, after being warned the new data privacy law it was charged under was ripe for a legal beat-up. It pushed for a US

They are aiming to use blockchain technology to improve the efficiency of supply chains, transportation, and energy. Siemens is one of the world's largest makers of electric equipment, such as power plants, trains, industrial robots, and industrial controllers. It produces and installs a wide range of lighting systems for different buildings, such as streetlights, and signs and it is also one of the biggest providers of public and private transport infrastructure. They also manufacture heavy equipment, ship compartments, and energy equipment. Siemens will work with GreenOak to explore new ways to integrate their existing business processes and digital capabilities. The partners are also going to explore how blockchain technology will lead to new opportunities in efficiency gains.

Blockchain Can Promote a Culture of Trust Siemens and GreenOak have decided to evaluate blockchain technology for its ability to empower a better relationship between the two companies and with their customers. They are exploring ways in which the information stored in a blockchain could be used to promote a culture of trust. The two companies will also analyze how blockchain technology can improve their collaboration with partners in industries other than smart city technology. Blockchain technology is one of the best tools for any company that wants to promote transparency and traceability in their supply chains. It can help improve efficiency by enabling the tracking of items as they move across the internet. For example, a blockchain could allow the progress of items in transport networks to be shared with other parts of
