This is a Fantasy Grounds token set designed for tabletop role-playing games. The tokens are designed to be useful in most fantasy games. They are designed with the following attributes in mind: High Quality: The quality of the tokens is nearly perfect. You should have no major problems using these in any setting. The only issues I can see are that the size of a token group may vary from person to person. If you are doing large amounts of playtesting with these tokens (very helpful) and you have a large group, it could mean a lot of tokens. This can be an issue if you do not have a large quantity of tokens. If you have the tokens, I think they are nice. I would not want to do a game of D&D with these tokens. However, I think if I need to create a map of a dungeon (really helpful in a really big game) then these would work fine. The importance of the size of the tokens is that they are far better quality than most tokens you find on the net. For this reason, I would not use these in a FFG generated game (or any game that you wish to move from the PC realm into the boardgame realm. Obviously, make sure that you have enough to test with. Standard: I think this should work with most games. For example, I used these in a game I ran for my organization that had fantasy elements. I think they are okay for that. If you are doing a game that has fantasy or RPG elements, then I would think they would work fine. If the tokens are too small, they will be hard to use and remove from the map. You will not be able to easily move them or place them in groups. Make sure that you have the tokens that are appropriate for the games that you play. Medium: Medium is pretty much anything that fits between the small and large category. I think this size works well for almost every type of game. If you do not fit anywhere in the medium category, you could always create your

Palmaz-Schatz stent for arteriovenous fistula creation in renal transplant patients with vasculature suitable for monoplanar angiography. Selection of suitable vasculature for placement of arteriovenous fistulae in adult renal transplant patients is often difficult because venous anatomy is frequently quite variable and is more often evaluated after dilation with a balloon dilatation catheter. To date there are no data on venous anatomy of the native vascular system suitable for stent placement before manual dilation. Using transluminal angiography, we prospectively evaluated the venous anatomy of our patients' native renal vascular system and evaluated the utility of the Palmaz-Schatz stent for creation of arteriovenous fistulae in adult renal transplant
