Contact: Cocos-SupportDetection of Brugia malayi parasites by polymerase chain reaction. The first step in the development of a sensitive polymerase chain reaction (PCR)-based diagnostic test for filarial worms is the identification of genes that are expressed in the adult worm. We used subtractive hybridization to identify a PCR amplicon in a cDNA library made from microfilariae (mf). The amplified sequence included a complete open reading frame of 1129 base pairs (bp) with a predicted 5'-untranslated region of 247 bp. Comparison of the deduced amino acid sequence of the cDNA to predicted proteins in the GenBank revealed a high level of similarity to several genes described in other nematodes, including Brugia malayi. Northern and Southern blot analyses demonstrated that the gene is expressed in the adult stage of B. malayi. The full-length cDNA was used to generate a probe for the detection of the gene transcript. The sensitive detection of parasite in mf and adult worms in infected human blood was performed by means of PCR amplification.Q: punctuation and capitals What is the answer to this question?
