Most people with a side effect will have a relatively short-term reaction (5 to 10 days), with the burning feeling ending within a day or so; however, if a severe urticaria occurs that is prolonged (lasting more than 3 weeks) or of a slightly longer duration, it is almost certainly a result of capsaicin cream. Nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory drug (NSAID) -induced side effects are most common in those using topical NSAIDs or on the face; your dermatologist or local skin-care physician will know which topical steroids you are taking and can suggest alternative options for your skin. If you are taking oral steroids, be sure to have your psoriasis put under control before starting any other topical medications (or adding other topical medications) because the side effects may become more pronounced. If oral steroid treatment is necessary, choose a low-dose, short-term oral steroid. ## Capsaicin Capsaicin, a natural compound from red peppers, has been used as both a topical and systemic medication for arthritis pain. It is most effective for either a short-term or medium-term relief of joint-pain symptoms. Contact your dermatologist or pharmacist to see if you should discontinue treatment. A very 6d1f23a050
