The truth is that I am not an expert on this and I am on my fifth laptop so I have some experience with different operating systems, even though not much. I installed macOS today and I am almost certain that you can use a 2k keychain program, probably with Apple's password program. Or you can use a special Secure Universal Serial Number program. I don't know what the default password program is but I used pwgen and found a lot of free passwords. A former Apple employee told me that the default Keychain password is "password" and you can write it down and memorize it or you can set a more complicated password. For the password you use to log in to the computer there will be a password box that will ask you for a password. you will probably be prompted by a dialog box or you can just enter the password manually. If you have a password manager you can use the sync feature to sync the keychain. If you don't have a password manager then maybe you can try to read/write the keychain with the command line klist and pspkg, I don't have it and I cannot test it. There is a lot of information in this forum. Note that the password is the same as the user password. If you use Mac, the user password will be the same as the Mac screen name. But if you use Windows you will probably need a password manager.
