Mr. Kidd is a gentleman thief who is one of the better antagonists to James Bond in the series. In Moonraker, there was a brother-sister duo of villains (Julie and Blofeld). In Never Say Never Again, the master criminal was a German pharmacist with a phobia of needles. In For Your Eyes Only and Octopussy, the villain was an insane scientist. All of these villains were brilliant and committed, but in The Man with the Golden Gun, the villain is also quite a bit of a psychotic. Kidd goes by the alias of Solo. He is a member of the Spectre - one of the most feared secret organizations in the world. He is an ex-spy for the British Secret Service who was dishonorably discharged for shooting a man at a water sports competition and, according to Solo, for being too loyal to his friends. The casino scenes in the game are amazing. If you like games like Slay the Spire, your mission will be easy. The Forts protection system stops you from getting bored and keeps you on your toes so you'll have to make some really fast decisions. There are three different modes: a normal game, the story mode, and a challenge mode. You can select two of the three scenarios. In the first, you have to collect the agents (the ones that you capture). The rule of the game is that if you manage to get 3 agents, you get to play as the leader of the Brits. The other two modes involve conquering fortresses. You can capture the whole fortress by capturing its landmarks (the labs, the radar, the radio, etc.). In the story mode, you have to recover as much land as you can because you've got to accomplish a task. You can unlock new soldiers, special weapons, and you can even get out of a tough spot.

but the big draw is the charismatic performance from roger moore. moneypenny is a hard act to follow and it is to his credit that moore is able to convincingly channel m character and bond charm. he combines the two to great effect in his relationship with mrs. fleming. perhaps best exemplified when the character introduces 007 to her daughter after he extracts an invitation to venice for dinner. the 29 year old bond, who is surrounded by family for his 30th birthday, greets the new mrs. im sorry, what was your name again? he replies. her name is mummy, the girl replies. thank you for your birthday gift, he says, handing her a gift box. its a newspaper, she says. it is? he replies. yes, its a newspaper, she says again. ill be back tomorrow. ill be in venice and ill be thinking of you as i read it. her heart imitates a schoolgirl because its just like that - its just the way it is. there are strong echoes of the scene in diamonds are forever as 007 brings home the gift of a newspaper from tiffany. but the meeting with the daughter helps make the audience connect with moore more immediately. with scaramanga, and to a lesser extent ernst stavro blofeld, its clear that the bond films are a vehicle for the performer. with the cartoon-like villain scaramanga, moore proves he can still turn lemons into lemonade in the climax. at no point does he appear one-note. the stunt-packed sequence, where bond sets up the plan to kill a deluge of mooks, plays out as a chess game. as it goes, moore comes across as wonderfully chuffed in his interactions with scaramanga when he refers to him as the 001 with a heart. its a throwaway line, but it works brilliantly.
