interleukin-4 receptor. Evolution and receptor regulation. The interleukin-4 receptor (IL-4R) is a heterodimer consisting of the ligand-binding chain, IL-4R alpha, and the signal transducing receptor subunit, IL-4R beta. The importance of this receptor in immunity is illustrated by the fact that IL-4R alpha-deficient mice are severely immunocompromised. As compared with wild-type mice, IL-4R alpha-deficient animals have reduced numbers of IL-4R alpha+ cells and decreased numbers of CD4+ Th2 cells. The binding of IL-4 to its receptor is known to increase the affinity of IL-4R alpha for IL-4R beta, but the mechanism of receptor regulation is unknown. We have studied the relationship between IL-4R alpha expression and the affinity of IL-4R alpha for IL-4R beta in vitro by expressing the cytoplasmic domain of IL-4R alpha in truncated forms of IL-4R beta. We demonstrate that the cytoplasmic domain of IL-4R alpha exerts a negative regulatory function on the affinity of IL-4R alpha for IL-4R beta. Our data suggest that the IL-4R alpha and IL-4R beta form a functional dim
