SourceForge.net is a Free Software repository. A central location where community members can contribute and share their Free Software. There are two component parts to SourceForge.net: the SourceForge.net project management system, and the download service. SourceForge project hosting Each project hosted on SourceForge.net is called a "project". SourceForge.net project hosting is free to any individual or organization. SourceForge.net project hosting is free as in cost. The SourceForge.net project management system (PMS) provides free project management services, including project tracking, project documentation, source code control, bug tracking, wikis, issue tracking, contact forms, mailing lists, forums, and issue tracking. SourceForge.net PMS also has the ability to convert source code into compiled executables (also known as binaries). A project can have multiple versions of the PMS, in which case the users of the project can request the different versions. Project hosting Each project hosted on SourceForge.net uses a file called a "project file". The project file contains information about the project, such as the project's home page, mailing list, bug tracker, and code repository. SourceForge.net provides a File Upload feature for uploading source code and other project files. The files that are uploaded to the SourceForge.net are uploaded in a binary format called the "SFN" format. SFN stands for SourceForge Network. To upload a file to SourceForge.net, the user creates an SFN file using the SFN Builder tool. The SFN Builder tool is provided as a binary archive (that is, it's not web-based), and only the SFN Builder tool can create SFN files. The SFN Builder tool allows the user to specify all the parameters of the SFN file. The SFN file can have multiple sections that define different project components. The sections are listed below: Project Home: This section is the home page of the project. When a user requests a page to be served, the web server on the machine returns the page specified in the URL of the request. The Project Home section contains a set of hyperlinks that provide access to the other sections of the project. Project Feeds: This section lists the mailing list, bug tracker, mailing list archives, and source code repository for the project. Project Logos: This section contains the logos for the project's team members and the license of the project. Project News: This section
