One of the coolest new features from Photoshop is called “Neural Filters,” which changes expressions, poses, ages and facades in real time. It’s a new workspace inside Photoshop that includes simple sliders so you can make magic happen with Photoshop’s AI technology. The AI works on the same principles as we use in our software, especially in our Machine Learning tools, Adobe Sensei. It is all based on training data that we collect from users as part of the Photoshop development process. The user then can apply that training data to his or her user interface. While Adobes' competition including Google, Apple, and other companies are making big ambitions this year to take on the Mac App Store, this Photoshop update is the most significant for Photoshop this year (Image: Business Wire) Adobe Photoshop is famous for its extensive feature set for editing images. It also has the most features of any other photo editor available, and you’re likely to see many sites write about Photoshop’s “features.” Of course, Photoshop is famous for its features, and it has the most features of any other photo editor available, and you’re likely to see many sites write about Photoshop’s “features.” Beyond features, the biggest difference between Elements 10 and CS6 is the use of a new feature in CS6 that triggers the activation of its Apple Touch Bar. Adobe has also added new features to the Touch Bar’s gesture panel, among them a Quick Selection tool that can select a specific area of an image easily.
